WHY build 'Faith Partners' teams?

Identifying and utilizing their congregation's resources, energy and knowledge is a very practical method of expanding ministry. Prevention, early intervention, referral assistance, recovery support and advocacy are crucial to the life of your congregation and the community.

Often the best people to undertake these ministries are people who have suffered addiction themselves, but by virtue of the anonymity of recovery groups they can't always be identified and asked to help.

Step One: Complete Congregation Survey

Step Two: Gather the team

Step Three: Attend the training

With the survey complete congregations will know who wants to help and have the congregational needs identified. In the training the team will learn HOW to link those needs to their ministry efforts, implementing the strategies that best fit the congregation attending the training the team builds strength and cohesion giving every member ownership and direction to serve.

We know that faith practices keep people living longer healthier lives. Prevention of substance abuse can begin in church, can be strengthened through faith messages and exemplified through activities at church that support a substance free life!

The science of addiction has come a long way. But we know that recovery doesn't happen without faith; it is as simple and as profound as that.

Please feel free to contact the GGAPP program to get materials or additional information.

WHAT is this training about?

Practical theology; this training will help teams learn about prevention of substance abuse and addiction helping them to utilize this model for a practical and active ministry of prevention and recovery within a congregation.

There is a need for faith communities to demonstrate effective knowledge and support to their congregations about substance abuse and addiction.

Relations are suffering, families are in crisis and resources are being depleted. Faith leaders are on the front lines fighting many fires. This training will teach a team of congregation members how to build and equip their group with the information skills and resources to initiate, plan and implement an alcohol and drug abuse ministry in their congregation, building a fire fighting brigade!

WHO should attend this training?

The members of your faith community, who are in a position to lead, implement and direct the energy and passion of a faith team. The group will gather new tools and learn new methods of building the faith based addiction services and supports in your church.

Learning and networking with other 'faith professionals' provides richly informative experiences. Caring, non-judgmental acceptance is an important part of every experience, this training is where the dialog builds knowledge, increases understanding and affords a unique opportunity to share the burdens of building a recovery ministry in difficult times.
